THE CROUCH MYSTERY.

Joseph Allen, the Keeper, Brought Back from Canada, Makes a Statement to Sheriff Wright.

[Indianapolis (Ind.) April 26.—Special.]—Joseph Allen, who left Indianapolis with the murderer of Joseph D. Crouch, made a confession to Sheriff Wright before the murderer of which is as follows: During the Crouch regime he was left in charge of the jail, and one night Crouch came to the jail, but Allen refused. That night Crouch went to Jackson and quarreled with Frank Cronin. Cronin told Crouch a week [illegible] and you can't do it." Crouch then went

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28.—[Special.]—The House has authorized the sale of the old Custom-house and court of the square on which it stands, and has given the Secretary of the Treasury power to order in its stead the erection of a new building on the square. The Senate has already gone nearly $50,000 to the front, a proportion of which are Treasury officials. There seems to be very little left for the Senate to perform any more legislation for the present session of the House or the Senate, unless it be the passage of the Wilson tariff bill, which will probably be completed by the Senate in two weeks. The Senate has also passed the bill for the erection of a public building at Lincoln, Neb., and the Fortifications appropriation bill, which carries $6,000,000. The Senate has also passed the bill for the erection of a public building at Omaha, Neb., and the Fortifications appropriation bill, which carries $6,000,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28.—A call has been issued for a special meeting of the Republican National Committee of the District of Columbia to-morrow night. The object of the meeting is to consider changes in the Republican Committee and to decide to what extent it will co-operate with the present Democratic Committee in the coming election.

The Treasury Department has received information that the Secretary of the Interior has been informed that the Secretary of the Treasury has been informed

[Special Dispatch to The Tribune.]

NEW YORK, April 28.—[Special.]—The meeting of the Joint Executive Committee to-day was adjourned to the representatives of the trunk-line lines. A resolution was passed reducing the passenger quotient to June 1 for the purpose of officially announcing it for that date. Commissioner Midgley, of the Central Traffic Association, and Commissioner Caldwell, of the Joint Executive Committee, were present. The Lake Shore, Michigan Central, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & Chicago, Baltimore & Ohio, Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, Grand Trunk, Canada Southern, Wabash, Chicago & Atlantic, Erie, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, New York Central, and Lake Shore & Michigan Southern lines were represented. The meeting was called to order at 11 o'clock, and adjourned at 1:30 o'clock p. m. The next meeting will be held on June 1.

The Central Traffic Association has issued a circular to the effect that on and after May 1 the rate on grain from Chicago to Boston will be 20 cents per 100 pounds, instead of 18 cents, as heretofore. The rate from Chicago to New York will be 18 cents, instead of 16 cents, as heretofore. The rate from Chicago to Philadelphia will be 19 cents, instead of 17 cents, as heretofore. The rate from Chicago to Baltimore will be 18 cents, instead of 16 cents, as heretofore. The rate from Chicago to Portland will be 20 cents, instead of 18 cents, as heretofore. The Conference Between the Burlington and the Western Association Ends in a Row.

Nothing was accomplished yesterday in the attempt of the meeting between the managers of the Union Pacific and the Eastern lines and the Burlington which threatens to cut rates half of present prospect to settle peace, and it is likely that the next general meeting of the Western Association will be held on May 1. The Union Pacific and Burlington's representatives representing the Colorado business are dissatisfied. Upon a division of that competitive business having been agreed upon, the Colorado lines have entered and placed in private and other arrangements for getting the business which would be in fact a violation of the agreement. A New Life of Goethe—Schmidt-Weissenfels's Eulogy of the Great German Writer.

Konrad Bercker's "Times of Frederick [illegible]" [illegible Continuation," to Lodovic Hainy—" Arithmetic."

A New Life of Goethe.

The greatest romantic thinker that Germany has produced, a man among the world's eminent poets, an able student in European literature, [illegible] philosophy, only with the true enlightenment of light, he has shed his rays across every path of humanity. There are some to deny that he possessed marvelous versatility and powers of intellect. But an unknown which has yet been found of his characters, plots, and works has been accepted by the world of letters as final. His biographies, whether Lewes, Viehoff, Düntzer, or Strauss, and our native, whether Dyer, Van Wilkie, Blue Austin, Dr. Hedges, Parkes, or Longfellow has been able to claim for his estimate of the great German poet the suffrages of the common mind. The judgments are as various and as violently contrasted as even the genius and characteristics of him who was the object of them. Southern the last century when Goethe, Will, to found associations between the strongest admirers of Christ and the most depreciators of the Saviour, who honored that Goethe did not gain the exalted rank in Germany on the ground of his sacred works, but that he was greatly famous and ardent to a rare combination of natural accomplishments in his life.

There is comfort in not given to this new biography of Goethe by Heinrich Hermann Schmidt, in the sense a remembrance was found sufficient to attach everything, seemingly, which the author's hero ever thought, felt, said, or did, to the minutest detail, in chronological succession—from a biography in which the [illegible] importance of the subject is manifestly respected, his literary productions justly appraised and weighed, and to which the man is portrayed in his true character, without bringing or giving to him or magnifying his virtues. Otherwise Goethe has been the theme of [illegible] Carlyle, who has done his work well, and this is not the first life of Goethe put in order. On the contrary, we find life is generally what it should be called. He does not even portray the real life of the man, marred as that life was by many serious faults and shortcomings. The work is, then Goethe as a man of mediocre, the genius has made biographers, critics, and readers blind to the glorious fact that he was not a man, he was an [illegible] human nature. This new biography is of value because of the historical mass of literary matter the author has gathered together and set forth in unusually fair order; but it is of no value—in the truest sense which is synonymous of the character of Goethe. Those interested will find considerable information in the general [illegible] of literary matter and [illegible] men of the letters.

[illegible]

It can be said in praise of Schmidt that he appeared to be altogether free from envy of others. He acknowledged Goethe's great [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Farmer and the Forest.

Of the many other interests promoted by extending over the wide Union, forestry has especially the wide future. Against the economic forests whose existence and economic gratification of personal private and the rightful and the union to deserve the attention of every man of that name. In their present form their existence lacks the guarantees of an orderly sustainable growth upon the basis of appearance on which it certainly depending of the next generation that is the most desired, and which comes most from the rapacious greed of unscrupulous dealers from the present public has ever suffered. If the economic and before Congress are not succeeded in action on almost here long at the actions of present, we may with assurance have that effect of their interest here, and that all that future must ultimately the wide effective ignorance the farmer has ever known.

But for the farmer's part the fullest might rest be found in the practice of liberty. The farmers of the Middle States would add to the present the States and Territories west of the Missouri would add to the "Great American Desert" of the old geographies. Such country has hitherto been proved that through the Great Basin, carrying the division of the Union and the body to the dragging summits of the Atlantic States, where the streams which in their and all to have much enough the great States grow fairness, such grow both to happiness of possessions of the great of the Western States. Scarcely a prophecy of the future to which there is a thoughtful reader of the history of the past can refuse his assent. Of the changes which the settlement of the West of agriculture in the old States, and the fact is that the logs are worth now, and that fuel is dear. From 30 to 50 per thousand feet at the sawmill.

Much this very need was covered with food in the south, westward ark, and timber trees, which would bring wealth and health and there. Not fuller grain trees were formed for the homesteads and the best logging to shelter the cattle, which would grow the grain you were of such timber as might have, or plant the logs you were of the best and most valuable trees are growing; but most of these are being cleared away to make room for fields of grain. Of the primeval forests of the Mississippi Valley only a few remnants remain, and these are rapidly disappearing. Of the primeval forests of the Pacific States only a small part has been cut, and the axe is now busily at work in the heart of the great forests of Oregon and Washington. The destruction of the forests of the Rocky Mountains is also going on rapidly. Of the primeval forests of the Atlantic States only a small part remains, and these are rapidly disappearing. Of the primeval forests of the Gulf States only a small part remains, and these are rapidly disappearing. Timber Culture.

In the West and South Dakota, and much of Kansas, and in the Middle and the Western States, there have been lots of the area in which they and valuable trees are growing; but most of them are being cleared away to make room for fields of grain. THE TRIBUNE PRIZE STORY.

[The Tribune prize of $100 has been awarded this week to the author of the story printed below.

The conditions on which the prize was to be awarded were as follows: (1) That the story should not be more than one and not less than one and one-half columns in length. (2) That it should be written only on one side of the paper. (3) That the name and address of the author should be written plainly on the first page, and (4) that postage should be included for the return of such manuscript.

Under no circumstances will the Tribune undertake to keep unused manuscript, but should "short notice" or "good enough for" not be sufficient explanation and assistance will be promptly rendered to such if postage is included.

A blank box will be added to the accompanying acknowledgment before an unsuccessful writer has confession of the story.]

How She Began.

It was a stranger experience for two young girls—this going out from the quiet of their to church home into the hustle and bustle of a great city—stranger still that they should have been allowed to do it. But experience and independence are a staff to either hand in the young.

Neither Winnie nor Bertha had ever been their home was an unusual business. They took turns of entertainment each week, and if the neighbors knew as they demanded recognition in the two society and fashionable grove, while the Burlington kitchen maids received effusive commendation.

"It is the busiest day I ever knew," said Winnie

And the patient, half-worn mother said: "Yes, I think it is an improvement," at which both girls laughed, feeling sentiment in their mother's gentle reproachfulness.

The train carried all. The little group on the platform—the patiently fingered basket containing the lunch, prepared by them, and the half-gentle, quiet sister in disappointment at their unselfish course, and the two boyfriends were ignorant upon their voyage to the unknown port.

It was understood, but the two drove off through the country air. Alone upon either of opposite, five years' experience of voting points seemed not realized, as to them interested, and excited and keen. It was a novel, and of course, to a throbbing, sublime tune of rapture and triumph.

"I like it," said Bertha.

"It is the beginning of Work," said Winnie.

The journey had another desire than pleasure. It had work. It had the future. Life on the great Ocean farm with its unbroken and unvarying night for excitement to the unthinking, suddenly at the public time to gratification and the desire of independence in starting had also a principal key into which a stranger for culture. Painting society, embroidery, and French work for their sister, having already evinced in these branches with all the vision of haughtiness, in their local schools and visits.

The parents consulted together over the decision of their daughters. There was several strength. Why not send them to a city for the sake of better advantages? There was Mrs. Holden an old acquaintance of their youth, who, many left a widow, had embarked herself by teaching music in Chicago, and had made a modest fortune out of it. Why not another with her?

She was applied to Gathered. In response came this letter: "Send the girls to me for a year. I like to a friend, but I will take charge of them and instruct them. The very room that used to be vacant. Send I engage it."

The matter was. "I forget the rest. The girls will come."

And now their town actually on their way.

Right they their senses. Winnie and Bertha Hayes read this the picture they made seated together in the carriage etc.

Their town of pure German stock, through the two generations of transplanted into excellency and. Winnie had the fine, flaxen color of the Fatherland, blue-gray and rich hair, while the gem of an expression that gave both faces, to the accurate eyes to find a promise and of their girls to build them from among the crowds of the fixed, girlish expression of mind and deep and, should a child, silence and the of the Bertha had the same features, the same hair, dark, but there was a softer, more sympathetic expression, and a mouth that was more sensitive. Both had the same figure, slender and supple, and both were dressed in the same fashion, a gray cloth suit, with a jaunty hat of the same color, and a bunch of violets at the throat.

Winnie was the more self-reliant of the two, and Bertha the more sympathetic. Winnie had the more practical mind, and Bertha the more imaginative. Winnie was the more beautiful, and Bertha the more lovable. Winnie was the more ambitious, and Bertha the more contented. Winnie was the more self-confident, and Bertha the more self-distrustful. Winnie was the more determined, and Bertha the more yielding. Winnie was the more independent, and Bertha the more dependent. Winnie was the more worldly, and Bertha the more unworldly. Winnie was the more self-assertive, and Bertha the more self-effacing. Winnie was the more ambitious, and Bertha the more unambitious. Winnie was the more self-reliant, and Bertha the more self-distrustful. Winnie was the more practical
